The money they use is called the Kenyan shilling. Kenya is a country in East Africa. Kenya has a lot of animals like lions, giraffes and hippos. Hippos cool down in mud lakes. The US state of Texas is slightly bigger than Kenya. ~ Teri
How do our bodies grow? I think it's just a question that nobody knows I took a little blink And how can I think I shut my eyes I grew another size That's how our bodies grow ~ Aoife	Our World We should care about our world because some people leave the tap dripping and that is bad, even some people put rubbish on the ground! So that is why we have to care about our world. ~ Karis	Dancing around the world Dancing is an important part of some people's lives and their beliefs and dancing can also be to scare off evil spirits (and that is where the real Halloween came from.) ~ Aidan
The Amazing Adventures of Bec, the Butterfly Once upon a time there was a family of butterflies: a mummy and daddy and a little girl called Rebecca, even though everybody called her Bec! They were very beautiful butterflies. This family was different from most butterflies because usually butterflies' mummies and daddies die before the babies are born. Usually they don't even have daddies! But this is a made up story. So who cares? But enough about that now. Anyway back to the story.... They lived on a lovely little tropical island just off the north coast of Queensland. The climate there is more humid than ours (just right for butterflies)! They were a type of butterfly that is called the 'Ulysses' butterfly. They are black and blue. They are very pretty butterflies. And I like them. In fact they are my favourite type of butterfly! One day Bec and her friends were playing hide and seek, and Bec was it. She quickly counted up to twenty and then scanned the horizon to see if she could see any of her friends hiding anywhere nearby. She could see a teeny bit of Alice the ladybug's wing, but that was all. She quickly flew over to her and she said, "Found you!" And then they went off together to find the others. Once they had found everybody Bec took a quick look at the sun and said, "You know, it might be time for us all to go home now." They all looked quickly at the sun, looked at each other and agreed that it probably was time to go home. So they said goodbye to each other and they all went their different ways home. ~ Grace D
